As the Executive Director of A Window Between Worlds (AWBW), I am proud to share with you our 2022 Impact Report on this year’s theme, “Connection.” When we feel connected, we feel supported, loved, and valued. Yet, true connection is not always easy; it can feel risky to be vulnerable enough to welcome others into our world, and to be open enough to be seen and accepted for all we are. This vulnerability does not happen in a vacuum — it requires trust and safety.

The rewards of connection built through this level of vulnerability are immense. It helps dissipate isolation and loneliness. Connection empowers us to build deep, authentic relationships with others and gain a deeper love and acceptance of our own self.

It is this belief in the power of connection that remains the cornerstone of AWBW’s programs, methodology, and approach to supporting an individual’s journey towards healing & growth. Our national network of Facilitators are trained to create a safe environment where survivors can explore and practice healthy vulnerability in community. In doing so, we provide a valuable Window of Time for each participant to reconnect with their inner wisdom, and rebuild trust — with themselves and with others.

As we reflect back on the incredible growth AWBW experienced in 2022, I invite you to join me and explore the ways in which connection may grow and transform in your life. Together let’s reconnect with one another and ourselves in a new way, knowing that each authentic connection we experience is helping to make the world a more safe, just, and welcoming place for us all.

By empowering community-led solutions, our Social Justice Fellowship Program cultivates the leadership and lived experience of participants to innovate collective art actions in communities across the country and abroad. These leaders use art to engage their communities, work with AWBW staff to bring forward their learnings and experiences to co-create valuable resources that can benefit our community of Facilitators and the public at large.

Sustaining Action: Durational Art

At the heart of both individual and social change, we are called to find ways to "own" our leadership. As a Durational Art incubator, AWBW’s aim is to foster space for innovation and build practices that invite everyone to explore how art can:

- empower us to crystalize our wishes for change;
- offer a path to creative, sustained action over time; and
- become a key to connection with ourselves and others.

Windows is proud to have partnered with Asian Pacific American Dispute Resolution Center for "Wings Against Hate," an art activation launched to break isolation and build community in the face of ongoing and increasing acts of hate.
Our annual “Home Is Where the Art Is” fundraiser invited guests to experience how Windows participants use creative expression to support their journeys toward healing. We honored three incredible individuals for embodying and advancing our mission. They share their connections to AWBW in a video at awbw.org/2022honorees

Eydie Pasicel, Program Director at Pathways to Independence and Windows Facilitator, led the workshop, welcoming attendees to create art representing strengths they want to connect to, launching our “Windows of Connection” workshop series. Learn more at awbw.org/connect

Thanks to our individual and corporate sponsors, those in attendance, and all who donated, we raised over $60,000 in support of our nationwide network of Facilitators and the tens of thousands of trauma survivors they serve each year.

Donor Story: Jamie Escoto

As many supporters of AWBW do, Jamie Escoto has incorporated art into her own life in ways she never expected. We hope Jamie’s story inspires you to connect with your own story and others in your community.

Building a Better World

“I believe in the power of art to heal, transform, and affect change. I realize that’s a bold statement for a self-proclaimed non-artist; but through the nearly two decades since being introduced to Windows, I’ve turned to art for help. And it’s changed my life.

My Me Doll brought me solace as I battled depression through a particularly dark time. I created Justice Journey Jars to guide tough conversations with my five-year-old son about race and racism. I discovered with my Durational Mural that I needed to prioritize myself and my family, resulting in a new job and a happier, healthier me.

Relationship Reset Stones gave me patience with my mom, who has had a difficult time accepting my brother’s sexuality. Family Gratitude Puzzle gave them a platform to acknowledge and appreciate their love for each other after over two years of silence.

I’ve even used art to honor my father, who I lost to lung cancer, adapting AWBW’s Puzzle Re(Connection) workshop to unite volunteers, staff, researchers, and doctors in the American Cancer Society Cancer Action Network’s movement to support those facing cancer.

Through AWBW, art has helped me build a better, stronger me. And now I’m using art to build a better world.”

Survivor Story: Pamela

Finding Freedom

“It’s amazing to me how powerful AWBW’s healing arts programs are.

“I am a domestic violence and sexual assault survivor who had many people help me along the way to freedom, as I call it. I feel that those connections and experiences along with healing and art are the “invisible threads that connect us.”

I drew the fireplace because it represents a symbol of safety and warmth. When I was small I went to Cracker Barrel with my family on a rare restaurant visit and remember feeling so safe looking at the fireplace. When my girls were small, and I was still in a bad situation, we started going to Cracker Barrel for breakfast as a place to get away, and we still go together today. It’s still a place of warmth and safety for me and now, them.

Ten years ago I could barely speak or look at people, let alone imagine my dreams could come true. Having the experiences in my DV group along with my peers helped me heal so much and I get to watch not only me but also my friends follow and achieve our dreams. One of my dreams was to get an AWBW certification. These experiences have led me to facilitate AWBW healing art both for DV peers in my group as well as for my pre-K students since many have also been affected by trauma.”

Our Mission & Vision

Window Between Worlds is dedicated to empowering individuals and communities impacted by violence and trauma through a transformative healing arts program.

We view art as a catalyst to release trauma, build resilience, and ignite social change. When individuals create art in a safe community they can be heard and respected — replacing violence and shame with safety and hope.
